

THE VINE CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

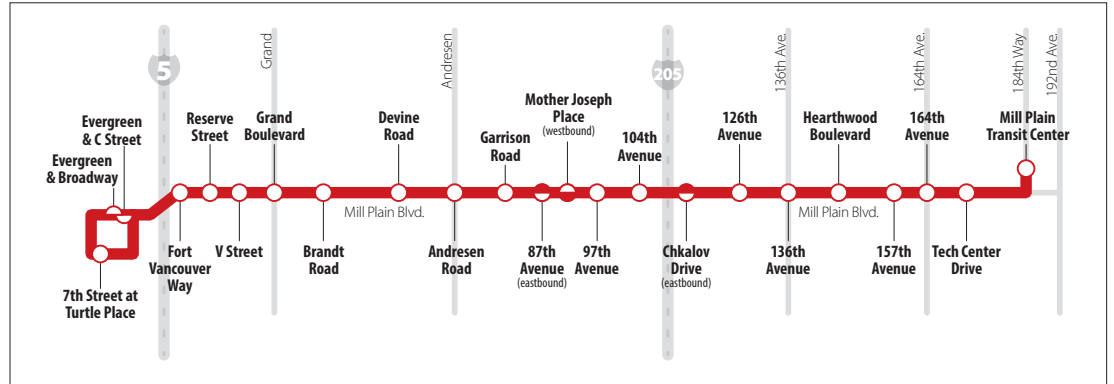

JUNE 2023

SUMMARY

Major construction activity is winding down on the Mill Plain corridor, with structural work on platforms and sidewalks largely complete at most station locations. Crews have shifted their focus to smaller elements of each future Vine station, including windscreens, railings, roofing and technology. Fiber and utility work continues along the entire project corridor. Workers are also making rapid progress at the new Mill Plain Transit Center, located near Mill Plain and 184th Avenue.

MILESTONES

In May, crews installed the final two shelter structures on the corridor, meaning all 37 new station locations now have shelters in place. At Mill Plain Transit Center, large concrete pours have begun to form the main busway at the facility, as well as the transit center platform. On the west side of the corridor, workers continued to install red shelter “icons” that identify each station location, plus utilities and other technology components.

WHAT'S NEXT

Crews will continue to install the smaller finishing components at many station locations in June. Roadway striping and painting will also occur at multiple locations in June, and major work will continue at Mill Plain Transit Center. For fiber and utility work, activity will continue throughout the corridor.

Mill Plain BRT is the second branch of The Vine, C-TRAN's bus rapid transit service. The new segment will primarily operate on Mill Plain Boulevard, serving a 10-mile corridor between downtown Vancouver and the Clark College Columbia Tech Center campus in east Vancouver. The Vine improves transit service by using larger vehicles, enhanced stations and other features to deliver faster travel times, better reliability and more efficient operations. The first segment of The Vine, serving Vancouver's Fourth Plain corridor, opened in 2017. The Vine is scheduled to open on Mill Plain in 2023.
